

Network Security Manager

Harris-Stowe State University's Department of IT Services is seeking candidates for a full-time Network Security Manager.

The Network Security Manager (NSM) will be responsible for the daily activities of personnel who support network functions and ensure that the network and client computing systems are functioning securely and efficiently to serve the needs of the University's campus community. The NSM will be responsible for configuring network systems to achieve the institution's security objectives, which include monitoring for data loss, intrusion detection, and violations of the institution's Acceptable Use and Security Policies. The NSM will also be responsible for managing servers and data bases to ensure that they are routinely backed up in accordance with the institution's disaster-recovery and business continuity plans. The NSM manages both the logical security and physical security of the IT Services unit, making recommendations to the vice president of Strategic Planning and IT Services for improvements.

The NSM participates in the development and enforcement of policies, procedures and guidelines that allow university constituents to operate according to best practices. Regardless of time of the day, the NSM must respond to all alerting systems that affect the security of HSSU data assets and physical systems. As needed, the NSM will coordinate incident response teams to address emerging threats to the University's data system. The NSM will also perform all other duties assigned.

The position requires a bachelor's degree in networking and at least one current certification in network security.

Salary: $51,000/ year

Submit a letter of application summarizing qualifications & experience, current vitae, official transcripts and three letters of reference.
